The hot spring opened by Miizumi Jozan has been healing people until today.

History of Jozankei

Jozankei Onsen was named after Miizumi Jozan, a monk who devoted his life to clearing the way for therapeutic hot spring baths in this area and laid the foundation for the present day Jozankei Onsen. Around 150 years ago, amidst the upheaval of the Meiji Restoration, Miizumi Jozan discovered a hot spring in the upper reaches of the Toyohira river. In a bare rocky valley with not even a path to come and go, and within an overgrown thickly verdant primeval forest along the upper reaches of the Toyohira river Jozan discovered a natural hot spring source. He moved into this unexplored area, taking great pains and even forgetting to eat and sleep, to develop therapeutic hot spring baths to take care of the sick and injured. Miizumi Jozan's enthusiasm soon moved people, a road was constructed and word spread of Jozankei Onsen.

SAPPORO

Jozankei is part of Shikotsu-Toya National Park near the city of Sapporo.

The area was created by volcanic activity and is home to two of Japan's most famous caldera lakes: Lake Shikotsu and Lake Toya. Mount Tarumae, Mount Yotei, and Mount Usu are volcanoes and the hot springs dotted around the area are also a result of this volcanic activity. Along with protecting this region, it is hoped that as many people come to experience this amazing natural environment.
